

Contributors

Melanie L. Buffington is currently an assistant professor of art education at Virginia Commonwealth University. Her research interests include teacher preparation, museum education, service learning, and technology in art education. Additionally, she is interested in the work of self-taught artists and how art is/can be used to generate social change. Correspondence regarding this article should be sent to the author at mbuffington@vcu.edu

Wanda B. Knight is associate professor of art education at the Pennsylvania State University. Her research interests includes explorations in visual culture, cultural studies, and preservice teacher education, particularly with respect to how oppressive behaviors, practices, and ways of thinking affect teaching and student learning. Correspondence regarding this editorial should be sent to the editor at wbk10@psu.edu

jan jagodzinski is professor of visual art and media in the Department of Secondary Education at the University of Alberta, Edmonton, Canada where he teaches in the areas of postmodernity and media education. His theoretical orientation draws on Lacanian psychoanalysis and its application to visual culture and pedagogy. He serves on the advisor council of several journals in art/education and he has authored numerous book, book chapters, and manuscripts. Correspondence regarding this article should be sent to the author at jj3@ualberta.ca

James Haywood Rolling, Jr. is a dual associate professor in art education and teaching and leadership at Syracuse University. Dr. Rolling earned his Ed.D. and Ed.M. in art education at Teachers College, Columbia University. His research interests include: arts-based research; the studio arts as research practice; visual culture and identity politics; curriculum theory; autoethnography; social justice; and narrative inquiry in qualitative research. Correspondence regarding this article should be sent to the author at jrolling@syr.edu

Robert W. Sweeny is assistant professor of art and art education at Indiana University of Pennsylvania where he serves as coordinator of the art education program. He earned his Ph.D. in art education from the Pennsylvania State University in 2004. He has published widely on the topics of digital visual culture, digital aesthetics, and the relationship between surveillance, works of art, and the gaze. Correspondence regarding this article should be sent to the author at bob.sweeny@iup.edu

Sara Wilson McKay is assistant professor of art education at Virginia Commonwealth University. Her research focuses on the ways in which works of art create new seeing, how looking can be a dialogic process, and the possibilities of seeing more of the educational process in and through art. Correspondence regarding this article should be sent to the author at swilsonmckay@vcu.edu