

CONTRIBUTORS

William Gorski is Associate Professor and Director of Graduate Studies in English at Northwestern State University of Louisiana. He has taught courses on immigrant narratives with a focus on the ethnic character of American cultures. Additionally he teaches Modern British Literature, Critical Theory, and Creative Writing.

Jan Saarela is Assistant Professor of Social Policy in the Department of Social Sciences at Åbo Akademi University, Finland. At present he is finishing his doctoral thesis in Economics. It concerns labour market behaviour in the bilingual area of Finland.

Fjalmar Finnäs is Research Director at Institutet för Finlandssvensk Samhällsforskning, Åbo Akademi University, Finland. He has written a number of papers on the demographic development of the Swedish-speaking population in Finland including comparisons with the Finnish-speaking population.

Delores Ayers Keller received a B.A. from Texas Tech University in 1996 and an M.A. from Sam Houston State University in 1997. Ms. Keller is a doctoral candidate in English at Rice University. Her essay, "The Playing Grounds of Childhood: Boyhood Battles in Américo Paredes' George Washington Gómez," was the winning entry in the 2001 NAES graduate student paper category. Ms. Keller is currently working on a dissertation project that examines narratives of childhood play in 20th century U.S. fiction.

Vivian Martindale is a lifelong resident of Alaska and lives in Sitka. Ms. Martindale has just completed her Bachelors of Liberal Arts degree through the University of Alaska S.E. Her emphasis has been on Alaska Studies and English, and she has entered a Masters Program in Cross Cultural Studies at the University of Alaska Fairbanks. Her essay, "Moving Mountains in the Intercultural Classroom," was the winning entry in the 2001 NAES undergraduate student paper category.