

Contributors

ALICE A. DECK teaches in the Department of English at Grinnell College and is a frequent reviewer of articles in Explorations in Ethnic Studies.

BARBARA HIURA teaches in an alternative school in Sacramento, California, and is past president of NAIES. She is currently serving as interim president of the Association.

JESSE JACKSON is in the Department of Elementary Education at Appalachia State University.

LEITA KALDI is a former employee of UNESCO and the United Nations. Her study outlined in this article is a part of a longer study sponsored by UNICEF during the International Year of the Child (1979).

SHIRLA McCLAIN served as a member of the NAIES Executive Council and teaches at Kent State University.

WILLIAM OANDASAN is editor of the American Indian Culture and Research Journal as well as A, a journal of contemporary literature. He is a widely-published poet; most recently A Branch of California Redwood was published by the American Indian Studies Center at UCLA.

GARY OKIHIRO is chair of Ethnic Studies at the University of Santa Clara.

JAMES R. PAYNE teaches in the Department of English at New Mexico State University and last year participated in the Reconstructing American Literature Project at Yale University.

DENNIS STEWART is presently working with commercial television to present agricultural issues and general information to the urban public.

ROBERT N. ZIMMERMAN graduated from Kent State University and has been publishing in little magazines for the past twenty years. He is interested in animal breeding as well as poetry.