

Contributors

SANDRA E. BOWEN is a Faculty Associate of English at Arizona State University where she specializes in African American Women Writers and African American literature. She has taught at The City University in New York City and at Hunter College.

BAMIDELE J. BRACY is a professor of Pan American Studies at California State University, Northridge.

HELEN JASKOSKI is a professor of English at California State University, Fullerton and is editor of Studies in American Indian Literatures. She has published on American Indian and African American literature and poetry therapy.

G. LYNN NELSON is a professor in the English Department at Arizona State University. Nelson edits and publishes the Peace-Letter (a networking newsletter for teachers), and co-directs the Greater Phoenix Area Writing Project.

SUZANNE STUTMAN is an Associate Professor of English at Penn State University. The secretary of the Thomas Wolfe Society, her edition of Thomas Wolfe's unpublished novel The Good Child's River will be published by the University of North Carolina Press in 1991.

JOHNNY WASHINGTON is an Associate Professor of Philosophy at Florida Atlantic University and Chair of the Ethnic Studies Program. He is also president of the Organization of African Descendants. He is the author of Alain Locke and Philosophy: A Quest for Cultural Pluralism.

ASHTON WESLEY WELCH is an Associate Professor and Chair of History at Creighton University. He received his Ph.D. from the University of Birmingham (England). He currently teaches courses in African and African American history and is coordinator of the program in Black Studies.

LINDA WELLS is an Associate Professor of Humanities at Boston University where she integrates issues of race, class and gender into the study of literature, film and philosophy. Her research interests rest in ethnic and women's studies. She is currently working on a study of working class women's writing in America.