Le Nozze Di Figaro Synopsis

Three years before our story starts, Figaro – (as in the barber of The Barber of Seville) – aided Count Almaviva in marrying the beautiful Rosina. Figaro also borrowed 10,000 francs from the housekeeper, Marcellina, promising to repay her or else marry her. Now he is preparing to marry Susanna, the Countess’ chambermaid. However, the Count himself is enamored of Susanna. He has promised her a dowry in the hope that she will secretly grant him his droit du seigneur, a feudal right to sexual favors with servants on the night before their wedding—a rite he had renounced when he married Rosina. The story begins on the morning of the wedding day.

The servants Figaro and Susanna are about to be married, but their employer, the Count Almaviva, has also cast his roving eye on the bride-to-be. Figaro vows to outwit his master. And there’s another problem: the much older Marcellina, housekeeper to Dr. Bartolo, wants to marry Figaro herself—and he owes her a tidy sum of money.

Meanwhile, the teenager Cherubino can’t help flirting with all the women of the household, including the Countess herself. Enraged, the Count orders him to join the army. Susanna and the Countess recruit Cherubino to their plan to trick the Count, playfully dressing him up as a girl. When the Count unexpectedly arrives, they must maneuver quickly, making Cherubino jump from the window so that Susanna can take his place undiscovered. But the complaining gardener ruins their plot, and Figaro must cover for the boy by faking a limp. Marcellina and Bartolo demand that the Count settle the dispute of whom Figaro will marry.

Susanna sets the servants’ plot in motion by leading the Count on with the promise of a tryst. Marcellina demands that Figaro pay her back or marry her, but when Figaro shows her his birthmark, Marcellina realizes he is her long-lost son and reveals that she and Dr. Bartolo are his parents! It is then decided that the wedding will be a double one—Susanna and Figaro as well as Dr. Bartolo and Marcellina. During the wedding festivities later that day, Susanna confirms her rendezvous with the Count with a note, sealed with a pin.

Later that night, the gardener’s daughter, Barbarina, is upset because she has lost the pin, which the Count entrusted to her, and she tells Figaro and Marcellina about the rendezvous. Figaro rants against women, especially his faithless bride. When Susanna and the Countess appear, dressed in another’s clothes, he hides to watch. Susanna sings of love, knowing that she is making the listening Figaro squirm. The Count arrives to woo “Susanna”—the Countess in disguise. Figaro, who has realized what is happening, declares his love for the “Countess,” to the consternation of Susanna and the rage of the Count. The real Countess reveals herself, and her husband realizes his folly and earnestly begs her forgiveness. She grants it, and all the couples—the Count and Countess, Susanna and Figaro, Barbarina and Cherubino, and Marcellina and Bartolo—enjoy a happy ending.

Director’s Note

As sometimes happens in the warmer months, companies choose to stage a performance using the facade of a stunning piece of architecture as their backdrop. It is this scenario that we have adopted in presenting this production of Mozart’s masterpiece. So, sit back and enjoy while our “travelling troupe” assembles their resources and “transports” you to sunny Seville.
