C.S. Murphy
CT MANAGING EDITOR

Finding a parking space on the MCV campus has never been easy, but lately those trying to do so have found the task to be even more confusing and frustrating.

"The highly urban and densely populated area makes parking a special challenge," said Melanie Shopshear, manager of VCU Parking and Transportation Services.

The problem began early last year when VCU determined that the upper four levels of the older and southernmost portion of the Visitors' Deck should be demolished and replaced.

The Visitors' Deck, adjacent to Main Hospital, is comprised of two independent structures. The older structure accommodates 549 vehicles while the newer one accommodates 326.

VCU Parking and Transportation Services estimates that it will take nine months to complete the construction project.

The problem is, during these months, patients and visitors will still need to park their cars.

A group of senior hospital and VCU administrators evaluated several parking options to decide which plan would best fill the needs of patients and visitors.

They decided to contract Central Parking System, Inc. to provide a valet parking service during the time the Visitors' Deck would be closed for repairs.

The valet parking plan didn't go over very well with patrons, however, and was abandoned after only a week. The service operated from Jan. 3 to Jan. 9.

On Jan. 10, the Visitors' Deck reopened temporarily to provide parking until Monday, Jan. 24.

After that, patients and visitors will be able to self-park in the newly-constructed

N Parking Deck located at 10th and Leigh streets.

Because of this change, 879 VCU employees will have to park in spaces in other facilities.

This won't be an easy move for employ-

Business school goes to work in West End

Corporate center opens doors to off-campus courses

What serves primarily as the site of various corporate activities has become a satellite campus of sorts for some VCU students this spring.

Innsbrook Corporate Center in Richmond's West End is playing host to six graduate and undergraduate courses offered by the School of Business, which is working to implement the university's three-year plan to expand off-campus studies.

"We think this is an effort to serve the working market that we currently don't serve," said Howard Tuckman, dean of the school.

Tuckman explained that the classes meet once a week from 5:30 p.m. to 8:10 p.m.

"That way when students get out from work," he said, "they can take classes and go home. (The schedule) was specifically tailored for them."

The three-credit courses offered at Innsbrook include:

- Business 301, a statistical-analysis course offered on Tuesdays
- Business 305, a tax-planning-for-individuals course offered on Thursdays
- Business 333, a risk-and-insurance course offered on Wednesdays.

Other courses scheduled on Tuesdays include Business 421, a small-business-management course and Business 640, a management-theory-and-practice course.

In addition, Jean Gasen, associate professor of information systems, teaches Business 691 — Technology

"(The class) is designed to be experimental," Gasen said. "A non-traditional way of looking at different methods of teaching."

Students have accounts with academic computing, she said, to allow for course work through Electronic-mail and computer conferencing. They also will visit businesses to watch technology support groups at work.

First Health Services, Virginia Power and Markel Corp. offer the building space at Innsbrook for classroom use.

E.G. Miller, associate dean of administration of the business school, explained that junior status is not required to enroll into many of the Innsbrook classes, which allows students without business training to use the facilities.

"I don't anticipate currently enrolled students to take these classes (at Innsbrook)," Tuckman said, explaining that the Innsbrook classes are designed to fit the needs of working students who aren't able to travel downtown for classes.

"We think the business school facilities are preferable (for on-campus students)," he said.

Gasen disagreed.

"Many on-campus students actually live in the West End or work in the West End and come to VCU at night," she said, explaining that the Innsbrook classes may be more convenient for them.

Although the classes aren't held in the Business Building, they meet the same accreditation standards and tuition requirements as classes offered on campus.

"It's an experiment," Gasen said, "to see how we define the walls of VCU — not only in the urban area but also in the surrounding areas of Richmond."

"Everyone is excited about the project. There is a general feeling of positive anticipation."

Joanna Hanks, director of economic development and public relations at J. Sargeant Reynolds Community College, which also offers business classes at Innsbrook, said the college is excited about VCU's plans.

"We see it as a marvelous opportunity for a partnership in higher education," Hanks said.

A combination of the community college's lower-division business classes and VCU's upper-division classes allows "a good partnership so that individuals can attend professional-development seminars plus seek a degree — all without going to different locations," Hanks said. "It's like one-stop shopping!"

J. Sargeant Reynolds offers its working students afternoon "short courses" that focus on professional development in business and industry. Lower-division courses are available in the evening to freshmen and to sophomores. The classes meet in the Center for Professional and

Senate candidate Miller stops at VCU

The United States' problem is "not insufficient government but too much government," said James C. Miller, a Republican candidate for Senate, who spoke Friday at VCU to more than 30 faculty members.

Miller, the guest speaker at the "Breakfast and Politics Series" sponsored by the political science department, discussed his own qualifications for office and responded to faculty members' questions.

"My institutional training and my experience in government gives me a handle on how to fix it," the candidate said.

In particular, Miller pointed to his various positions in the Reagan administration, which included his work as budget director, head of the Federal Trade Commission and an appointment to the National Security Council.

Miller also commented on his opponent for the Republican nomination, Oliver North, who, he said, refuses to join him in publicly debating the prominent issues of the Senate race.

"What do you do when you become a U.S. senator?" he asked in reference to North. "You've got to engage (in debate)," he answered his own question.

According to Robert D. Holsworth, a professor of political science at VCU and the event's organizer, Miller was the first of at least four political figures scheduled to speak at the invitation-only breakfasts.

West campus takes grad studies application office

Elizabeth W. Campbell

CT STAFF WRITER

Moving the School of Graduate Studies application processing office to the basement of Ginter House won't affect students, administrators say.

Crowded offices, heavier workloads and inconvenienced students, administrators say, caused them to move the office — previously based on the MCV campus in Sanger Hall — to the academic campus.

"There will still be an office on the (medical) campus in Sanger Hall," said William Dewey, vice president for research and graduate studies. "The most important thing is that there is an office for graduate students on both campuses. That is the best move."

Most graduate students — about 4,000 — study on VCU's academic campus, in contrast to only 1,000 on the medical campus. Sherry Sandkam, assistant dean for graduate studies, cited this disparity as a main reason for moving the application office to the academic campus.

"There will be no decrease in service or accessibility at all," Sandkam said, adding that the new office will afford students more graduate information, and the staff will enjoy additional room.

"I think most of our walk-in traffic is heavier on the academic campus," said Sandkam, who will continue to head all the services offered at the graduate studies office. "Most of the graduate program directors tend to call (our office), and that service will continue."

Aileen Edwards, an admissions counselor and office services specialist, said she sees the move increasing convenience for students.

"It can sometimes be difficult to solve problems or answer questions over the phone. ... It will be better to be physically there for students," Edwards said.

Sandkam emphasized that despite the move, business continues as usual.

"We can process applications anywhere. None of those transactions will be interrupted, and that is our goal," she said. "We will simply improve our efficiency and eliminate the duplication of work."

Applications left on the medical campus still will go to the Ginter House office, Sandkam said, adding that inquiries for graduate programs have increased, and the office receives about 6,000 graduate applications a year.

Susan Kennedy, associate dean for the College of Humanities and Sciences, said the office has served as a great help to her.

"They've always been just a phone call away, and I will probably continue to just call them for help and information," Kennedy said. "But it will be helpful for students to be able to stop by and do hands-on kinds of things."

"If you are making a list of people saying 'welcome,' please add my name to it."

As of Jan. 1, 1994, the School of Graduate Studies application processing office was moved to the basement of Ginter House, 901 W. Franklin St. The new west-campus office number is 828-6916.

Students diagnose ills of health services

Assistant director defends accusations

K. Suzanne Alford
CT STAFF WRITER

A sophomore at VCU has a complaint against University Student Health Services after she sought treatment there during the middle of the '93 fall semester.

Nicole G. Sanders said she visited student health to have an unusual cough treated.

"It felt different than a regular cough," Sanders said.

On her first visit, Sanders said she wasn't surprised when a nurse practitioner diagnosed her with a flu that had been going around and advised Sanders to return in a few days if she didn't feel better.

Sanders said she returned twice that week, and each time she saw a different nurse practitioner.

On the third visit, Sanders said she was coughing so often that she couldn't write a check to pay for an inhaler. The receptionist, she said, handed her an admission form and asked her to sit down and to complete it.

"I couldn't do anything; it was unreal," Sanders said. "No one seemed to really care that I couldn't breathe."

The third nurse practitioner, Sanders said, administered a respiratory test — of which Sanders never learned the results — and decided the student's condition was improving.

If the previous nurse practitioner had seen her, Sanders said, it would have been evident she was worse instead of better.

"I wasn't seeing the same nurse practitioner. There has to be a better system," she said.

At the persuasion of her family, Sanders visited Patient First on Midlothian Turnpike in Richmond's South Side that evening. Within minutes of seeing her, she said the Patient First staff conducted a blood test, took X-rays and administered a respiratory test.

Shortly thereafter, Sanders received the diagnosis: pneumonia.

An X-ray, she said, showed one-third of her left lung filled with fluid, and the blood test showed a low white-cell count. The doctors, Sanders said, informed her she was close to needing hospitalization.

"The thing that really bothers me was that I had been in student health earlier that day," she said. "The truth of the matter is if I had really stayed home I would have been in the hospital."

Sanders said she doesn't believe that any one person was responsible. Rather, she said, the center is understaffed.

"There are not enough doctors there. The nurses are so overwhelmed," Sanders said.

Doris Rice, assistant director for administration of University Student Health Services, said the clinic sees many upper respiratory infections, and lab work is not performed in every case.

"We don't have the facility to do a chest X-ray," Rice said, but the staff uses their best clinical judgment in dealing with students.

"I couldn't do anything; it was unreal. No one seemed to really care that I couldn't breathe."

— Nicole G. Sanders, a sophomore reacting to treatment at University Student Health Services

dents. "We pride ourself in the quality of care we give."

As for students seeing the same nurse practitioner every time, Rice said it's unlikely. The doctors and the nurse practitioners, she explained, rotate between VCU's clinic and MCV's clinic, plus three nurse practitioners work in the Office of Health Promotion, which takes some of their time away from the clinic.

"We like our health education model," Rice said, referring to the rotating staff and the health promotions office.

Dr. David Nelson, assistant medical director for student health at VCU, said if students don't think they receive the proper treatment, individuals may ask the nurse practitioner or the physician about having certain tests administered or for that person's supervisor.

Rice said the clinic expanded in the past year with the addition of two physicians, but it has no immediate plans to expand further.

"We would love to have more staff," Rice said, "but given budget constraints it's just not possible."

In another complaint against student health, a junior at VCU — who will be called Cathy — said during spring '93, she visited the center to have treated what she believed to be flu symptoms: a fever, swollen glands and a sore throat.

Cathy said she was surprised to have a nurse practitioner question her about her last menstrual period and the potential of her being pregnant.

The nurse, Cathy said, pressed further with more questions relating to the possibility of her having a sexually transmitted disease.

She said she answered all of the questions negatively.

The nurse practitioner, Cathy continued, decided that she couldn't let her go without double checking, so she gave the student a pelvic exam.

University Student Health Services

Facilities: 711 W. Main St., Gladding Residence, suite 159

Complaints:

- A student said she felt the clinic was understaffed for the size of VCU.
- A student said she felt more was read into her flu-like symptoms than was necessary.
- A student said she felt that a receptionist in the clinic acts callously toward patients.

Retorts:

Doris Rice, associate director for administration of University Student Health Services, responds:

- Because of budget constraints the clinic can't afford to expand its staff.
- The staff uses its clinical judgement in dealing with patients.
- The receptionists are effective, efficient and pretty good with customer service.

Dr. David Nelson, assistant medical director of Student Health Services, responds:

- The patient has the choice to recommend tests to nurse-practitioner or physician.
- The patient has the right to ask to see a nurse practitioner or physician's superior.

"I thought that was kinda weird," she said, "to go in with flu (symptoms) and get a pelvic exam."

Rice said the nurse practitioners use their clinical judgment and do enough pelvic exams without feeling the need to do extra exams for students with flu symptoms.

"Something in the conversation must have triggered the concern," Rice said, for the practitioner to believe a pelvic exam was necessary.

Jami A. Hay, 20, said a receptionist at the clinic recently treated her callously. Hay said she called to cancel an appointment for later that day, and a receptionist rudely told her she should come in and see a nurse practitioner anyway.

"I just think if she's going to work with the public she needs to get her stuff together," Hay said.

Rice said the receptionists are responsible, adding that they keep the medical records straight and efficient and are pretty good with customer service.

"I've been here four years," Rice said, "and it's the best (staff) I've ever had."

BUSINESS

Secondary Development at Innsbrook.

Sidney Gunst, president of The Innsbrook Corp., said there is strong interest among Innsbrook's employees to further their education.

"If the customers are here," Gunst said, "it's easier to take education to the customer than vice versa."

And that's what VCU plans to do. Tuckman said becoming more "student-friendly" is another aspect of the university's strategic plan.

"VCU plays a critical role in the development of Richmond," he said. "Being available to supply skills that Richmond needs is part of our mission."

Tuckman said he believes VCU's involvement will enhance Innsbrook's reputation as a business center.

Gunst agreed that the university's link with business opens doors on both sides.

"VCU's involvement upgrades the quality of service we can provide companies and our employees," he said.

The business school also offers graduate business courses at Philip Morris USA and is involved with a contract-teaching program for the Virginia Department of Transportation.

ees who were accustomed to the new N Deck, which was opened in February 1993.

This 1,070 space deck plays home to the MCV Campus Bookstore, MCV Child Care Center, University Mail Services and University Printing Services.

Shopshear explained that many people were uneasy about valet parking because they had never used this type of system before.

"People were very skeptical about leaving their vehicles," explained Shopshear. "There were also some operational problems."

These "operational problems," said Shopshear, included reports of items stolen from vehicles, damaged vehicles and valet's taking too long to return cars.

"People were not willing to deal with that and neither were we," she said. She couldn't provide a detailed account of thefts and damages but estimated that there were about a dozen reports of such incidences.

Other sources say that poor planning and lack of communication — with staff and visitors alike — contributed to the demise of the valet parking plan.

Thomas Harris works in a visitors' information booth in Main Hospital. He said that he and other office-service assistants received no warning of changes in the parking system.

"We didn't even know what was going on," he said. "They didn't inform us at all."

Harris explained that his job is to give patients and visitors information, and since he was confused about the parking situation, he couldn't help others.

The university, he said, eventually produced a flyer for him to distribute that explained the parking changes.

Parking and Transportation Services could not yet estimate how much its attempt to provide valet parking will cost the hospital.

Letter from the Editor

Let me take this opportunity on behalf of the Commonwealth Times to welcome fellow students back to VCU. We hope the break has been productive and restful.

We would also like to encourage students to join an organization that thrives on bringing VCU news, information and entertainment in a lively and timely manner.

There are many opportunities here at the Commonwealth Times. We never turn down a student who is eager to learn and practice the principles of journalism. Whether it be in reporting, editing, photography, production, advertising or business, we have a position available.

The Commonwealth Times has expanded its operation through the years and this semester we plan to increase publication to three-times-a-week. We feel our coverage has also improved as our rate of publication has increased. Our focus has targeted more of VCU, from the administration to the SGA, and from MCV to athletics. We will continue to bring students the news that keeps them up to date and informed.

But it's not always easy for us to stay on top of every issue. We rely heavily on other VCU student organizations as well as faculty, staff and department heads to send press releases. We usually print the important information from the release or sometimes, follow up with a story. So please send us a fax at 367-9201.

But most of all, we need students. Volunteers make up the backbone of the Commonwealth Times and without them, we would cease to exist. Our editors never forget that.

Speaking of our editors, we are proud to announce many of them have moved to internships and professional jobs. Last year, one editor worked as an intern for the Wall Street Journal and since has been hired as a full-time employee.

This year, another editor is looking forward to a USA Today summer internship. We annually have an intern at the Richmond Times-Dispatch and two former members have moved to local editorships.

This is because working at the Commonwealth Times allows students to practice what they learn in class. Also, students learn important lessons that professors can't teach — like working as a team and dealing with a variety of people.

Plus there's nothing like interviewing top administrative officials or covering a big sporting or music event.

So please stop by our offices at 901 W. Main St. and fill out an application. Or call us at 367-1058.

Stopping Teen Violence

Fueled by drugs, alcohol and racism, teen angst has mutated from apathy to anger.

According to the FBI, an average of more than six teen-agers is killed every day. The Justice Department estimates that nearly a million teen-agers are raped, robbed or assaulted by their peers each year.

Last June, six Houston gang members were tried for the brutal deaths of two teen-age girls.

A day before the crime was committed, the gang's leader boasted, on a local TV program about gangs, that "human life means nothing." Five days later, the girls' nude bodies were found. They had been raped repeatedly and strangled with a belt and a pair of shoelaces.

Aggression is not contained within state boundaries — what happened in Texas could easily happen anywhere. Everyone is a potential victim.

In junior high school, I was standing nearby when a teen hoisted a garbage can above his head, then brought it down swiftly to strike another teen. The up-and-down motion of the can continued, to the cheers of the aggressor's friends, until the victim was beaten unconscious.

Cruel acts, such as these, must be prevented.

More than constructing new state prisons must be done to accommodate offenders. Money spent on our corrections system should be spent to increase rehabilitation, not provide for wholesale detention.

Build Hope

Representative Robert C. Scott suggests instead spending $2.6 billion to eliminate parole. As is currently proposed, Scott thinks the money should be used to construct Boys & Girls Clubs around the state to keep crime from tempting Virginia's youth.

Rehabilitating first offenders now, instead of blindly injecting them into the penal system, will prevent the problems that face us today: rising crime and overcrowding in correctional facilities.

In December, City Manager Robert C. Bobb investigated Cleveland's "boot camp" method of juvenile reform as an alternative for Richmond.

For 90 days, offenders sentenced to boot camps are subjected to calisthenics, marching and a structured way of life. After the youths complete boot camp, they spend seven to nine months at a center to participate in a variety of rehabilitative programs, including drug and family counseling.

At the center, the military motif continues, and youths may be sent back to the boot camp for several days for more disciplining.

While the camp doesn't admit sex offenders, it does allow those involved in robbery, grand larceny, weapons charges and drug trafficking to participate.

Educate Youth

Educating offenders, instead of locking them away, instills self-discipline and teaches skills that can be applied in the job market, deterring participation in criminal activities as a means to scale the socioeconomic ladder.

In most inner-city neighborhoods, pushing drugs is a quick ride to success. By educating urban youth, teens can be shown that other opportunities exist.

When communities help wayward youth discover and hone their strengths, the entire nation profits.

This is why the most effective prevention of teen violence should begin not within the court system, but within the community.

More young black men have gone to jail than to college. Fathers, uncles, brothers and friends have all done time. With the fall of traditional social supports — home, school and community — these men are left as role models.

When kids grow up in abusive households they learn to physically act out their anger, rather than verbalizing their frustration. Teen-agers are more likely to be delinquent when raised in households where parents are poorly educated or unemployed.

Therefore, parents must concentrate on eliminating risk factors, by helping or finding help for both themselves and their children. Most importantly, kids must be taught that a job will take them further than a gun.

Offer Aid

In many communities, local businessmen have created a job network to put youth to work. Some community elders offer job training sessions to familiarize kids with the workings of businesses and computers.

When a community takes an interest in a teen, the teen will take interest in the community. All that is needed are individuals committed to helping future generations.

Only a combined effort, a compact between community and government, can safely guide our youth into the next century. America must respond.

IN THE MOOD ...

Diane Giles
CT SPECTRUM EDITOR

Vacations are great. You get all that time to do those things you always wanted to do but never had the time. For me, it was moving out of my parents' home. (I guess I had the time before, just not the money.)

Anyway, it took the whole month of "Winter Break." (I wouldn't want to be politically incorrect with a term so crass as "Christmas Vacation.")

Veteran movers may not be surprised, but I sure was. I started off very carefully, wrapping everything in newspaper and marking all the boxes by room for efficiency. By Jan. 2 — Moving Day — I was throwing my new set of glasses in with my fish tank, hoping for the best. Fortunately, they made it. My fish wasn't too thrilled, though.

On Moving Day, I started feeling a little strange when I realized my roommate had everything in five nice, neat boxes. I, on the other hand, had 27 boxes, eight garbage bags, four totes, three lamps, an assortment of loose bedding items and a fan. (You never know when you'll need a fan in January.)

There were even a few scary moments when I wondered if my one room's worth of stuff would fit in our six-room apartment.

Yes, I'm a pack rat.
And I packed it all.

I did manage to throw a few things away as I was unpacking. (Rule No. 1 for moving: If you can't throw away useless junk on a daily basis, at least don't pack it all and haul it across town.)

I found lots of fun stuff. Clothes that don't fit. Books I read once and will never read again. Pictures of my high school boyfriend. I finally dumped them all, so to speak.

The most interesting item was hiding in a file folder of magazine articles I was saving to read. The folder in question was compiled over four years ago, by the way.

Under the scrutinizing gaze and brutal advice of my roommate ("Throw it out! Throw it out! Ohmigod! Throw it out!") I found an article on organizing your life. It was titled "How Not to be a pack rat."

Good thing I saved that one.

I'm just scared that, now that I've got six rooms to fill — minus my roommate's bedroom, I hope — I won't be able to move again until I can afford to buy a house.

I may live on Grove Avenue for the rest of my life.

CD REVIEWS

COUNTING CROWS

AUGUST AND EVERYTHING AFTER GEFFEN RECORDS

"I dreamt I saw you walking up a hill-side in the snow/Casting shadows on the winter sky as you stood there counting crows/One for sorrow/Two for joy/Three for girls and four for boys/Five for silver/Six for gold and seven for a secret never to be told."

If you wondered where the group's name came from maybe these lyrics, from "A Murder of One," will give some insight. (Of course, maybe that's where the lyrics came from.)

Either way, it's a CD well worth the price.

It's mellow and emotional and nostalgic. It brings to mind images of the Midwest, grain fields, trains and high school romances.

Adam Duritz wrote all lyrics, sings, and plays piano and harmonica. These sounds, added to those of an organ, an accordion and the standards (drums, bass and electric guitars), give a rich, full sound, uncomparable to many modern bands.

E

BROKEN TOY SHOP
POLYGRAM RECORDS

The (nearly) one-man band is back.

Playing everything from the piano to guitars to the melodica to the slingshot (!!!), E gets only a little help from his friends on this CD. It sounds great recorded, but it definitely makes you wonder what this guy would sound like in concert.

"Broken Toy Shop" fits this release. The songs describe events from the viewpoint of a child, such as "Tomorrow I'll be Nine."

"Tomorrow I'll be nine/And everything will be the same/.../They're always looking at me funny/I'm always doing something wrong/I'm thinking they'd be better off if I was gone."

Though most tracks are similarly sad and wistful, a few are just bizarre.

"Hello are you there?" sounds a little like a Pink Floyd throwback. The background is an overseas phone line, the lyrics, "na na na na na na na na na na na na na na na na/.../hello/are you there?"

Wait and see if you like the releases if and when they make it to the radio.

What the boarding students missed

Brian J. French

CT ASSOCIATE SPORTS EDITOR

For the VCU men's basketball team, the winter break was almost as wild as the Richmond weather.

Wins at No. 11 Louisville and George Mason and in the Sun Carnival Classic against Iowa State started Ram boosters dreaming about March Madness.

Losses at Tulane and Southern Mississippi, a loss to Tulsa in the Rams' only home game of the break and a defeat at the hands of Texas-El Paso took that hope away from those fans, plunging them into worry for the same future they were just dreaming about.

When all was said and done, the Rams finished 3-4 for the break.

VCU coach Sonny Smith attributed the lackluster performances, especially in the Tulane and Southern Miss contests to poor shooting.

"Any night we shot well, we played well," Smith said.

Shooting woes, particularly Tyron McCoy's, have given Smith reason for concern.

"Tyron (McCoy) has been in a severe shooting slump, and it may have touched the rest of the team," Smith said.

As a result, the Rams are 8-5 (1-2 in the Metro), heading into tonight's non-conference clash with Oklahoma.

So what happened up to this point?

• Dec. 22 — VCU 109, George Mason 88 — McCoy stole the show for the Rams, racking up a career-high 40 points in the VCU rout. The 40 point performance was an all-time high for the Patriot Center. Kendrick Warren added 27 for the Rams, who pulled away early on in the contest.

• Dec. 29 — VCU 91, Iowa State 84 — Four players scored in double figures to lead the Rams past the Cyclones in the first round of the Sun Carnival Classic in El Paso, Texas. McCoy and Kenny Harris each scored 23 points for VCU, while Terrence Gibson added 18. Kendrick Warren scored 13 and pulled down nine rebounds for the Rams, who gave Iowa State their first loss this year. The Cyclones were led by forwards Fred Hoiberg and Julius Michalik, who scored 25 points each. Hoiberg also grabbed eight rebounds. Freshman center Marc Jackson scored four points for VCU before leaving the game with a second-degree strain in the medial collateral ligament of his left knee, making the Rams' already suspect bench depth an even greater concern. He would miss five games.

• Dec. 30 — Texas-El Paso 70, VCU 58 — The homestanding Miners had only one scorer in double figures in the finals of the Sun Carnival Classic. That one player, however, was tournament MVP Antoine Gillespie, who scored 37 of UTEP's 70 points. Gillespie was 12 of 23 from the field, and hit all 10 of his foul shots. The shooting guard also pulled down six rebounds. For the Rams, Harris led the team in scoring with 18, while Warren had nine points, 15 rebounds and five blocks. Both were named to the All-Tournament team. Kareem Washington was the only other VCU player to score in double digits, with 12. The Rams shot a dismal 34 percent for the contest.

• Jan. 3 — Tulsa 92, VCU 84 — The Rams started the new year on the wrong foot, dropping a home contest with the Golden Hurricane. Forward Shea Seals led a balanced attack with 25 points, while wing guard Lou Dawkins added 20. Point guard Alvin Williamson scored 14 while handing out six assists. VCU was led by Warren, with 23 points and seven rebounds, and Gibson, who scored 22 before fouling out. The two-game losing streak was the first for the Rams in the regular season since the end of the 1991-92 season.

WATCH THIS — Senior guard Kenny Harris has been making moves like this to help the Rams compile an 8-5 record.

• Jan. 8 — VCU 93, Louisville 89 — The Rams came into Freedom Hall against the 11th-ranked Cardinals looking to make it respectable.

They came away with a big win.

And of all the players to step to the forefront, it was walk-on-turned starting center Rodney Ashby who became the hero, scoring 24 points and grabbing a game-high 13 rebounds against the Metro's premier pivot player, Clifford Rozier. Both were career highs for Ashby.

Growing pains during break ail young Lady Rams

Leanne Anama

CT SPORTS EDITOR

The Lady Rams might have enjoyed their break from classes but the hiatus was hardly a pleasant vacation. The Lady Rams compiled a 1-5 record during the break and are 2-8 overall, including a 64-44 loss to Liberty.

Dec. 11 N.C. State 86 VCU 53

Junior guard Tasha Courtney led the Lady Rams with 14 points. Svetlana Pankratova added 11 and nine rebounds and Karen Parker contributed 10 points and four boards.

Dec. 13 VCU 60 McNeese State 56

The non-conference win was sparked by a 20-point effort by Pankratova. Junior guard Jacinda Alston added 11 points, Dawnita Price contributed 15 and 11 rebounds. Karen Parker had a career-high 10 rebounds in the Lady Rams 47-36 rebounding effort.

Coach Susan Walvius announced the dismissal of Tasha Courtney for disciplinary reasons stemming from an incident during the McNeese State game. Courtney

Walvius said she was sorry this had to happen but she would not tolerate a player being disrespectful to a coach. Walvius also said it was in the best interest of the team to take this action.

Dec. 18 Old Dominion 80 VCU 49

The Lady Rams traveled to Old Dominion and were soundly defeated. The Lady Monarchs were led by Celeste Hill, who recorded a triple-double with 20 points, 10 rebounds and 12 steals.

VCU was led by Alston with 13 points and freshman Aundria Sparrow with 10.

Old Dominion outrebounded the Lady Rams by 11 and forced 30 VCU turnovers.

Dec. 21 Richmond 58 VCU 53

The Lady Rams lost to their cross-town rival after taking a 32-31 lead at the half.

The Lady Spiders went on a 10-2 run to take a lead they would never relinquish. VCU cut the deficit to two with 41 seconds remaining and then regained possession on a Richmond turnover. Alston missed a three-point attempt with five seconds remaining and Lady Spiders sealed the win.

Alston led the VCU effort with a career-high 20 points while Pankratova added nine and four boards.

Jan. 5 George Mason 54 VCU 44

The Lady Patriots contained the Lady Rams, holding them to a shooting performance of 25.9 percent from the floor in the first half. George Mason's dominance took the form of a 29-15 halftime lead. In the second half, VCU went on a 14-0 run to cut the lead to 39-37. But the Lady Rams could not complete the comeback.

The Lady Rams were led by Pankratova with a game-high 18 points and seven rebounds. Alston and Dawnita Price added nine points a piece.

Jan. 8 Southern Miss. 68 VCU 66

Senior guard Tanya Bullock hit a jumper as time expired to give Southern Mississippi the Metro conference win.

VCU had a six-point lead with eight minutes to play but the Lady Eagles came back to take the lead. VCU's Niamh Darcy tied the score at 66 with 32 seconds remaining. Bullock missed a shot which VCU's Jacinda Alston rebounded with five seconds left. But Bullock stole the ball and scored the winning basket as time expired.

Bullock led all scorers with 27 points while Janice Felder and Patricia Nash added 16 each for the Lady Eagles. VCU was led by Dawnita Price's career-high 20 points while Alston scored 13, Pankratova had 12 and Tammy Carter had 11.

VCU outrebounded the Lady Eagles 42-25 behind the Price's 10 boards. The Lady Rams shot a blistering 51 percent from the field in the contest.

BASKETBALL

Warren scored 25 and pulled down eight rebounds, while Harris scored 23 and handed out eight assists for VCU, as they beat Louisville on their home court for the second time in three years. The Rams win snapped a 10-game winning streak for the Cardinals, as well as a 12-game home winning streak dating back to Feb. 16, 1993. Included in the streak was a 90-78 win against VCU in the Metro tournament finals. Greg Minor led Louisville with 24 points, while Rozier had 18 and 10 rebounds.

• Jan. 13 — Tulane 78, VCU 64 — A timeout was called roughly six minutes into the first half of this game. At that point, the score was Jerald Honeycutt 20, VCU 13, Tulane 2. Honeycutt, a frosh forward, scored 20 of the Green Wave's first 22 points en route to victory. Honeycutt finished the game with 28 points and six rebounds. LeVeldro Simmons came off the bench to score 18 and Makeba Perry had 11 rebounds as Tulane won their first Metro tilt of the season. VCU got equal output from all five of their starters, as well as Washington off the bench. All six scored between eight and 14 points, the latter being posted by McCoy. The Rams' field goal percentage was almost as low as the recent temperatures back home, with a 34.8 percent performance.

• Jan. 15 — Southern Mississippi 69, VCU 64 — The shooting woes continued for the Rams, as they shot 38 percent from the field in a sloppy loss. Although the Golden Eagles won, their field-goal percentage was even lower (33.8). Guard Bernard Haslett, the Metro's leading scorer, hit four free throws in the final seconds to ice the game. Haslett finished with 24 for the game. VCU was paced by Warren, who scored 19 points, had 18 rebounds, and blocked three shots. The Rams committed 23 turnovers, including seven by Warren.

The Rams begin a four game homestand tonight with the Sooners game. With an 8-5 record, a win here is probably critical for VCU's NCAA aspirations.

"This game is important for many reasons," Smith said. "It will probably be important for our postseason chances, and we're playing a high-profile program. It will also be the first game with the students back (from winter break)."

Game time is 7:30.

SPOTLIGHT

VCU vs. Oklahoma

Date: Jan. 20

Site: Coliseum

Series Record: Oklahoma leads 1-0

Last meeting: Dec. 8, 1990 at Oklahoma (Oklahoma 141-105)

About the Sooners: Oklahoma (9-4) makes its first trip to the Richmond Coliseum. The Sooners were supposed to play the Rams last year at the Coliseum, but the game was postponed when VCU was offered an ESPN game versus Tulsa ... Ken Conley was expected to be redshirted this season due to an offseason injury, but his recovery was much swifter than anticipated. He is the only returning starter ... The Sooners beat Iowa State 93-90 on Jan. 15 in Ames, Iowa (a tough place to play) ... The 141 points scored by Oklahoma in their previous meeting with the Rams remains VCU's record for most points scored by an opponent

Game plan: Survive the press and you survive the game. If the Sooner press can be consistently broken, the Rams should have no problem hitting cords. Problem is, Oklahoma plays a traditional Billy Tubbs offense, which is the granddaddy of all fast-break sets at the college level. If the Rams can keep their composure and control the tempo, only running off of misses, then they stand a solid chance at winning. Bench play is a must in the game, since both teams will score in the 90s and 100s. The return of Marc Jackson from a knee injury should help. Also, a good field performance by Tyron McCoy would be a big confidence-booster for the small forward, mired in a shooting slump as of late. Although early in the season, a crucial game for VCU.

What Sonny says: "I hope we can handle the (Sooners' press). Most of our turnovers lately have been unforced. When we hold the ball, we throw it away. We've been rebounding and playing defense well, and hopefully that will continue."

VCU vs. South Florida

Date: Jan. 22

Site: Coliseum

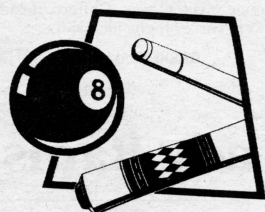

Series Record: VCU leads 21-10

Last Meeting: March 12 at Metro Tournament, Louisville (VCU won 79-72).

About the Bulls: Although South Florida (8-4 before tonight's game with Virginia Tech) is not expected to be more than a spoiler in the Metro race, the Bulls have pulled off some impressive upsets. Tulane, Old Dominion, Southern California and Florida State take residence in the South Florida victory column ... The Bulls are led by sophomore guard Chucky Atkins and junior forward Jesse Salters ... Chris Coleman, an important contributor off the bench for South Florida last year, left the team in the offseason.

Game Plan: First and foremost, don't overlook the Bulls. Florida State did that and nobody's heard from them since, losing to the likes of Wake Forest and N.C. State. South Florida may not look like much on paper but basketball isn't played on paper, it's played on hardwood. Exploiting the Bulls' glaring inside weakness and shutting down Atkins should make winning a much more likely prospect for the Rams. Again, improved bench play is a must for VCU, which has been forced to go with a seven-man rotation since Jackson's injury. It would be a good time for Jackson and George Byrd to get minutes, since they are as talented as the South Florida starters. The job of containing Atkins will likely go to McCoy. Therefore, his contribution (or anyone guarding Atkins) will be the most pivotal on the defensive end. The Rams should win this game, but cannot afford to fall asleep on the Bulls like they did last February. A loss here does considerable damage to VCU's NCAA dreams.

YourRealHoroscope

by Ruby Wyner-Lo
A.A.B.P. certified Astrologer

Aries: (Mar. 21-Apr. 19) You'll be the hit of the party when you give everyone malaria.

Taurus: (Apr. 20-May 20) Your tongue will be raw and blistered after a long night of felching.

Gemini: (May 21-June 21) Your relationship will be in jeopardy when you are magically shrunk to the size of an acorn.

Cancer: (June 22-July 22) During a tryout to become one of the "Fly Girls" from TV's "In Living Color," your pelvis will shatter, and permanently disable you.

Leo: (July 23-Aug. 22) The stars are sick of your ugly ass whining all the time. You die today.

Virgo: (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) You'll learn the true meaning of courage when you have a wet dream on the bus.

Libra: (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) If your spouse complains about your breath, bite into the minty fresh taste of your own hand.

Scorpio: (Oct. 24-Nov. 21) Don't take out work-related frustration at home, instead, drive a chisel into the skull of a passerby.

Sagittarius: (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) The stars say that now is a good time to get finances in order. Give all your belongings to cute girls.

Capricorn: (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) The sleepiness you feel lately is due to loss of blood from your severed torso.

Aquarius: (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) The autumnal cycle always seems to go so fast for you, because God-damn, you love to rake leaves!

Pisces: (Feb. 19-Mar. 20) Raise money for the orphanage by performing live trouser-wetings for wealthy eccentrics.
