Abstract

A (dis)ASSEMBLAGE OF THE GALLERY-GROWLERY

By Levester Williams, MFA

A thesis submitted in partial fulfillment of the requirements for the degree of Master of Fine Arts at Virginia Commonwealth University.

Virginia Commonwealth University, 2016

Major Director: Kendall Buster, Associate Professor, Sculpture and Extended Media

A (dis)Assemblage of the Gallery-Growlery exhibition and writing presents itself as a site of a morphological exploration of language, sound, and objects in tandem with the irreducibly venting black expression. Venting, the black expression never seeks wholeness within objects or language itself for it is a thing-in-itself. Its presence affords critical reception to a residue of delimiting forms. All growls eschew verbal objects for the manifestation of pure phonetics. A growl in a gallery is the growl. The growl resounds through the physicality of the objects and gallery. Also, it unwinds the object-among-objects as the phono-present stretches the discursive and existential limits of the Fanonian phenomenon. Hence, the contention and conjunction between physicality and acoustics—the visual and sonic—is the gallery-growlery.

A Hole

A gallery is not blank. It possesses material properties and is structured in ways that constitute it as a gallery. Collapsing, folding, expanding, contracting, compressing, depressing, a gallery is a fluid intermediary structured form. Even more, a gallery is a hole gaping for form and matter. Thus, a gaping hole exists and it must be filled.

Growling mouths. Growling stomachs. Growling anuses. Black voids. Black holes in space and time. All gaping for form and matter. Holes. William Pope.L writes about the hole theory—a theory of nothingness. His theory propagates without a point (to make).<sup>1</sup> Nonetheless one (or many) exists. It resides in-between the spaces of the theoretical discourse, away from definitive linguistic acts, and in the imaginary faculty of our minds. Such theoretical elusion and self-reflexivity provides the means to occlude the theory: yet, its paradoxical framing leaves the discourse wide open. The application of the theory ensures failure while its non-activity succeeds in procuring validation. A theory of nothingness has no substance, yet it provides subsistence. For everything could be engaged through holes. Thus, the negativity of a hole becomes the positivity of the vast world itself. Everything may be considered.

A gallery as a hole is paradoxical: it is not blank, yet it always lacks. For the gallery's sake, sound and its multiple instantiations is always transitioning through the physical-acoustical field of the space. A growl in a gallery is the growl. The growl in a hole of a gallery amends the lack through provisions of the imagination.

A Wholly Crisis

For black existentialist Frantz Fanon, the phenomenon of language is essential to the “understanding of black man’s dimension for being-for-others.”<sup>2</sup> That is, to speak is to exist absolutely for the other. An extended Fanonian predicament of being-black (and being-queer and being-perverse) is the presupposed integration into and digestion of normativity through the matrices of language. In short, the economy of differences is articulated through language.

Language situates our position in relation to one another, the body schema: we function always in relation to a schematic representation. The always-in-relation reifies reductive subjectivity.

“Look, a Negro! Look, a Queer! Look, a Pervert!”

Fanon decries: “I came into this world anxious to uncover the meaning of things, my soul desirous to be at the origin of the world, and here I am an object among other objects.”<sup>3</sup> He suffocates without the possibility of mobilizing beyond the crisis, and his limits (of theorizing to think beyond the problem) becomes a crisis itself. A wholly crisis exists. A whole hole. An unholy bedding.

The violence of language is the Césairean retrograde;<sup>4</sup> the poetics of language is the exchange of oxygen; and the transcendence of such is a soulful transmission. All growls eschew verbal objects for the manifestation of pure phonetics—the call for an immediate phenomenological orgasm.

<sup>4</sup> Aimé Césaire, a Francophone poet, writes about the detrimental effects of colonization not only for the colonized, but also for the colonizer. He warns that the project of colonization dehumanizes all as the colonial activity based on contempt changes the colonizer to the very thing it resents. Aimé Césaire, Discourse on Colonialism, trans. by Joan Pinkham (New York: Monthly Review Press, 2000) 38-41.

Levester fills the gaping hole through the growl and avoids falling alongside the Fanonian object-among-objects. The growl disrupts the “othering” body schema that is accessible in language and unhinges the disjointed, sterilized image(s) attached to subjectivity. It unwinds this wholly crisis as the phono-present stretches the discursive and existential limits of the Fanonian phenomenon. At the whim of its own bodily contractions, the growl is not (over)determined through ontological citation of images and archetypes. Its phono-presence announces a soul—a willful dimensionless being. Fanon writes. Levester growls. Growling mouth. Growling stomach. Growling anus. Language and its propensity to reify subjective relations subsides as the phono-present marshals in various modality of livelihood (called ‘hoods)—whether as objects, subjects, growlers, or etc. I am (a body of) living experiences. Black holes. Black voids. Black planes. Multiplanar.

The Gallery-Growlery

The growl resounds through the physicality of objects and a gallery. The dynamic proximity between physicality and acoustics—the visual and sonic—is the gallery-growlery. The primacy of the gallery-growlery is to probe the textual and overdetermined interdependencies of the visual and sound. The sonic requires a reconfiguration of the visual and the linguistic and reveals both as not the only determinants of ‘hood.

Some sing of subjectivity emerging from intersubjectivity where many diverges from one. The (re)sounding of subjectivity confounds such expectations. Deborah Kapchan, a literary and musical scholar, notes the plausibility of a self-determined subject through sound: “the sound body is a material body that resonates (with) its environment, creating and conducting affect.”<sup>5</sup> That is, the proliferation of sound through its mediators allows for porous concretization of the subject(s).

The sound body posits an existence of transitioning and a reality of here-elsewhere—both not immediately found in linguistics. The growl does not initiate with the sensory reception of a growl. Spit and breath precede and proceed from a growl. Both presuppose the intensities and bodily engagement of the eventfulness of a growl. The growl is the (un)sounding of a growl: it is eclipsed from the objects from which it transpires and expires. Hence, the site occurs at and away from the growl. The space before/after/inside the growl functions as interstices. Even more, the growl (sub)merges in other subliminal subaltern spaces as phonic insertions happen in and through intermediary forms. So, the sonic does not simply rely on the transpiring object since more mediators exist. In addition, the residue of the sonic does not solely lie within a singular object or space. It disperses. Phonic instantiations destabilize the linguistic regulations of the 'hood: it propels the conception of subject beyond the paradigm of relationality and into fields of sensations. The sole of my soul creases into interstellar places and interstices and vibes out.

Thereby, a (dis)assemblage of the gallery-growlery presents itself as a site of a morphological exploration of language, sound, and objects in tandem with the irreducibly venting black expression. Venting, the black expression never seeks wholeness within objects or language itself for it is a thing-in-itself. Its presence affords critical reception to a residue of delimiting forms. To growl for Form to form is the praxis for my bodily engagement where the sonic precedes and proceeds from the objects. Never settling, my 'hood perpetuate always as a sonic of being.
